“Answering the Challenge for Small Farmers”
Bill Gates June 06, 2011

“In early May, I challenged people to think of creative ways to tell the story of small farmers. I was getting ready to give this speech in Washington, D.C., to make the argument that investing in small farmers is the most powerful way to fight hunger and poverty.

Here’s why: The vast majority of the poorest people in the world get their food and income from farming small plots of land. Helping these farming families grow and sell more helps them become self-sufficient and build better lives.

(…) I also invited you to tell your powerful stories, and I was amazed by the response. We received more than 140 entries from people all over the world, including Kenya, India, and New Zealand. In addition to entries in the six official categories, we received research papers, comic books, and a radio script.

This COLEACP PIP exhibition received a “Best Photo Gallery” award from the Bill and Melinda Gates Foundation in 2011. It is created from a series of photographs taken by the young up-and-coming French and South African photographers Aurélien Chauvaud and Christopher Saunders.
